

Assignment 1: Core Values

To navigate the complexities of academic and professional life, I rely on five core values that define my character: Responsibility, Resilience, Empathy, Justice, and Ambition. These values are not just abstract concepts to me; they are tools I use to evaluate my actions, especially when I face difficult “crossroad” moments where my decisions have real consequences on others.

A defining moment that tested these values occurred during my Enterprise System Development & Modelling course. I was balancing my academic workload with a significant commitment to the university’s convocation committee. My ambition drove me to excel in extracurriculars, but this caused me to lose sight of my academic timeline. I managed to rush and finish my part of the draft right before the lecturer conducted the review. While the lecturer only briefly scrolled through our work –finding it complete, the damage to my team dynamic was already done.

My teammate was furious not because the work was missing, but because of the anxiety caused by my late timing. Even though I technically met the deadline, the harsh remarks they made left a mark on me. Justice compelled me to objectively admit that I was in the wrong; I had failed in my responsibility to provide my team with security and peace of mind.

However, the situation also required empathy. I had to look past the harshness of my teammate’s words and understand that their anger stemmed from a valid fear of failure. Finally, resilience has been essential in the aftermath. While the harsh remarks left a lasting mark on me, I refuse to let that memory paralyze me. Instead, I use that experience as a stern reminder that true success requires balancing ambition with the responsibility I owe to others.
